Subject REQUEST FOR CRIMINAL CONVICTION HISTORY
ON EMPLOYMENT APPLICATIONS

On May 23, 2006, your Board instructed the Chief Administrative Officer, Director of Personnel and County Counsel to:

1. Conduct a comprehensive analysis to determine the extent to which departments are inappropriately disqualifying applicants due to prior convictions.
2. Examine the feasibility of implementing an application process which does not deter qualified and rehabilitated individuals from applying for employment when such is the case.
3. Develop recommendations to improve training of human resources personnel in order to eliminate any unfair discrimination against qualified and rehabilitated applicants.
4. Jointly report back to the Board within 45 days with any recommendations to modify the County's employment application process as described herein.

The Department of Human Resources (DHR) sent a survey to all County departments and 60 other public sector organizations regarding their practices relating to the screening of employment applications for criminal convictions (Attachments A and B). This included the seven agencies that were reported in the discussion by the public to have already modified their applications to exclude questions regarding criminal history (Attachment C).

A random sample of applications received from four entry-level examinations was also reviewed. The findings of the review of the applications are inconclusive as to whether our current job application is a deterrent to potential candidates with criminal convictions. While there were applicants in each of the above examinations we reviewed who had conviction histories, we are unable to determine how representative it is of the total number of eligible candidates with similar backgrounds.

DHR's review found that the departments that do disqualify applicants due to their conviction history appear to be appropriately doing so based on established departmental hiring standards, County policy and current law.

SURVEY RESULTS

County Departments

The DHR survey found that departments maintain records but do not compile statistics regarding the acceptance or rejection of applications due to criminal convictions. All departments reported that they utilize the conviction information on the job application in determining eligibility for employment as part of the hiring process; and seven of the 38 departments evaluate the eligibility during the time of the application screening and have, in some cases, disqualified applicants due to their convictions.

Sixteen County departments have policies on conducting background checks. Eight departments have automatic bars to employment for designated positions. For example, Children & Family Services, Beaches and Harbors, and Parks and Recreation automatically bar convicted sex offenders because of their minor child client population. The Museums of Art and Natural History bar those who have theft convictions due to security concerns for the priceless collection of artifacts in their possession. Departments with peace officers (e.g., Sheriff, Office of Public Safety) bar applicants with felony convictions pursuant to State law.

Other Jurisdictions

Based on the 23 outside agencies that responded to our survey, only two (City and County of San Francisco and the City of Boston) have modified their job applications to exclude the request for information regarding an applicant's criminal conviction history. San Francisco implemented this change in July 2006 and Boston modified their application during Spring 2006. As these changes only recently became effective, there is no historical data regarding the impact this change has had in the number of applicants or the hiring process.

The City of Chicago is working with community leaders on a prisoner re-entry initiative and a review of their hiring practices is a component of this project. Seven other agencies indicated they are currently reviewing their hiring process and job applications; but no formal action has been taken yet.

Below is a detailed response to each of the items requested.

1. Conduct a comprehensive analysis to determine the extent to which departments are inappropriately disqualifying applicants due to prior convictions.

When screening employment applications, departments generally limit their review to whether the applicant meets the requirements as reflected on the job bulletin. However, all departments evaluate the applicants' criminal conviction background as disclosed on their applications during the hiring process. DHR reviewed a sample of the applications that were disqualified due to conviction history (Attachment D) and found that they were evaluated appropriately based on established departmental standards, such as:

- Designated sensitive positions
- Job nexus
- Type and nature of crime
- Recency of conviction
- Age of applicant at time of conviction
- Employment history since conviction

If a job application is rejected, it is County practice to provide candidates with appeal rights in the written notice of this action. If the application is accepted, the appeal rights are provided with the notice of results from the exam. A review of the 2,299 examination appeals filed during the last fiscal year (July 1, 2005 to June 30, 2006) determined that only two appeals were filed for application rejections due to conviction history. Both of the appeals were denied, which supports the finding that departments are properly evaluating the applications.

2. Examine the feasibility of implementing an application process which does not deter qualified and rehabilitated individuals from applying for employment when such is the case.

DHR conducted a random review of over 1,000 applications submitted for four entry-level examinations of different job types (laborer, clerical, administrative, and service). The results were as follows:

- Grounds Maintenance Helper (laborer position) – This examination was targeted for former GAIN/GROW participants as part of a welfare-to-work program. Of the 240 applications reviewed, 122 (50.8%) indicated on their applications that they had criminal convictions. None of the employees were excluded during the application process and 102 were placed on the eligible list and were reachable for appointment. Seven were hired.

- Intermediate Clerk (clerical position) – The requirements for this examination were six months County clerical experience, one year of clerical experience outside the County or an Associate of Arts degree in Clerical Procedures or Office Administration. Of the 313 applications reviewed, 12 (3.8%) indicated on their applications that they had criminal convictions. None were excluded due to their conviction history; however, only six were successful in the examination process, one of whom is eligible for hiring consideration and currently reachable for appointment.
- Administrative Aide (administrative position) – The requirements for this examination were a bachelor's degree from an accredited college and current enrollment in a designated masters' program. Of the 188 applications reviewed, eight (4.3%) indicated on their applications that they had criminal convictions. None were excluded due to their conviction history; however, six did not meet the minimum job requirements and only one of the remaining two was successful in the examination process. This candidate is currently reachable for appointment.
- Animal Shelter Aide (service) – There were no education or experience requirements. Of the 291 applications reviewed, 46 (15.8%) indicated on the applications that they had criminal convictions. None were excluded in the examination process due to their conviction history. Nineteen of the 46 were placed on the list; five of whom were reachable for appointment but were disqualified during the selection process due to their conviction history.

Although there were applicants in each exam who had prior criminal convictions, we are unable to conclusively determine if the County's current job application is a deterrent. This is due to the wide disparity in the number of candidates who did apply in the different exams, and the lack of available data on the number of eligible candidates with similar backgrounds who did not apply.

If the Board were to decide to remove the question regarding criminal conviction history from the County's employment application, several actions would need to take place.

- Destroy the present stock of applications and replace with a modified application. It is anticipated that the cost to provide an initial six-month supply of applications would be $75,000. Or, phase-in the modified application once the present stock is depleted, which should be depleted within nine months.
- Develop a supplemental document to the application for the collection of background information on designated positions, such as law enforcement or legal personnel.

- Revise current departmental background check policies and/or practices and develop a separate document for gathering this information at a point in the hiring process that is separate and apart from the examination process.
 - Identify any legal issues or automatic bars for certain positions (e.g., sex offender convictions for positions dealing with children) and ensure that it is clearly communicated on job bulletins.
 - Offer to meet and consult with County unions regarding this change in employment practice.
3. Develop recommendations to improve training for human resources personnel in order to eliminate any unfair discrimination against qualified and rehabilitated applicants.
- The County of Los Angeles is an equal opportunity employer that actively seeks to recruit a wide diversity of qualified candidates to fill over 95,000 positions. In order to further support this objective and to better ensure consistent and uniform practices are utilized in the evaluation of criminal conviction information during the examination and hiring processes, the following is recommended:
- Review current departmental policies and develop a Countywide policy on conducting criminal background checks.
 - Develop a training program for HR professionals Countywide that reinforces appropriate hiring standards in the employment process.
4. Jointly report back to the Board within 45 days with any recommendations to modify the County's employment application process as described herein.

The timing for collecting criminal conviction information in order to determine employment eligibility is a policy issue for your Board. We did not find any requirements or restrictions that would bar you from modifying the current practice of requesting criminal conviction information on the County application.

DHR's review of County departments' current practices found that they are utilizing established hiring standards when evaluating the eligibility of applicants. Therefore, as the County of Los Angeles is a large public entity that conducts over 1,100 open competitive exams, processes approximately 100,000 applications, and hires over 11,000 new employees (including part-time, temporary and permanent) on average each year, we feel it is more efficient to obtain any information to assist in hiring decisions as early in the process as possible. Requesting this information on the application openly discloses to potential candidates from the beginning, that their conviction history is a factor that is assessed for employment consideration, but convictions are not automatically disqualifying. Also, it does not artificially raise their expectations of being hired. They are given an opportunity upfront to give detailed information about the conviction (e.g., the conviction occurred as a young adult and no further offenses), as well as any other extenuating circumstances that they feel should be considered in the hiring decision. Therefore, it is recommended that no change be made to the County's current job application. However, we will modify the Information Sheet that accompanies the application to clarify the types of convictions that are not required to be disclosed (e.g., juvenile convictions that have been sealed or expunged; adult convictions that have been dismissed or pardoned under Penal Code Section 1203.4, or other valid court orders).

If you have any questions, please contact any of us, or your staff may call Susan Toy Stern, Chief Deputy Director, Department of Human Resources, at (213) 974-2631.

QUESTION	RESPONSE	COMMENTS
4. MAINTENANCE OF CONVICTION INFORMATION
A. Where do you store an applicant's criminal conviction information?		Most departments answered that this information is locked in secure file cabinets or destroyed.
5. OVERALL COMMENTS	A. Is there anything you would like to add regarding this potential change to this process?	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Chief Information Office: Our department contracted out our recruitment process to the Executive Office/Board of Supervisors and currently contracts with the Auditor-Controller. Therefore, it would be hard for us to answer the questions on the survey. • County Counsel: It does not appear that any change in the application would impact this department. We routinely do background checks on all candidates that are selected for employment. However, it is possible that removing this statement from the application will mean that a background check will now be mandatory for all potential hires because there will be no other method for screening. This may ultimately impact a department's budget since there is a cost associated with each background check. The current process does afford departments an opportunity to use the conviction information on the application as a means to verify the honesty of a potential hire. If they do not list criminal conviction information yet the background check reveals the opposite, the candidate's lack of honesty may have a job nexus in some instances. • Human Resources: If the question regarding criminal convictions is removed from the employment application we would need to ensure that during the hiring process we would be able to obtain this information.
